Determinants of cooperation with American police: An exploratory study of African Diaspora in the Northeast United States Expanding on preliminary data from a pilot study conducted to assess Kenyan immigrants' perceptions of the police in the United States, the purpose of this current study is to examine the following research questions 1. What is the nature and extent of the victimization of immigrants of the African diaspora? 2. How and when are services accessed by this population? Which services are accessed? 3. How are victimization and service usage affected by immigration status? 4. Do traditional models of procedural justice explain the experiences of immigrants of the African Diaspora?
